

True Business Gals

It did not demonstrate that the negative net investments exactly compare with the preceding positive ones.

This compensation is assumed a priori

If we had an answer to the above question we should know something about the conditions for a trend being generalised,

There is obviously a question of generality - the relative strength of the multiplier / effective demand creates / and of the capacity / generality of new investment.

Does the sectoral principle come in, or can we decide on the basis of a demand-supply balance?

