The av. profitability on all capital has little sense.
It, however, in the 1968 version, aims at the profit rate on new capital; that the capital of observers would be the profit rate earned on his recent investments (his last completed projects) and he would base his anticipations on that.
The influence of the total capital stock is exerted thus; The dividend of the old investments is expected to stick to them and the additional effective demand in investments spread over all equally. The new investor has to use a higher price etc. to attract more autonomy than the shareholders.
(which is easy for the additional demand of the new, less easy for the basic (old) demand.)
Thus any decline of the additional to eff demand will inevitably fall on the new investor.
