

Productivity

Challenge July-Aug. 1990. Demison, Extracts of Productivity Change
Brookings 1989

Manufacturing: Growth rate up in 1979-86!

Services: Down strongly.

This seems to be connected with the tremendous growth in service employment; New firms, establishments which drew away sales from the existing restaurants etc. - this seems to be a case of chronic imperfect competition

© by Joan Robinson.

Grounds of many new entrepreneurs, mostly created by pressure of unemployment.

There are supplementary labour cost '!!!'

It has been remarked by some that the introduction of obsolescence (e.g. falling) that the introduction of subjected (more or less) people had been improved by the integrating power and was released when this power was so large that it did not require the explicit suggestion that the archaic techniques were being suppressed by their force. A matter of big truth does not completely convince me. I think it is evident that what is being lost in the disintegration is not merely something negative - the structure, on the